

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A computer implemented method for monitoring and analyzing operating software scheduling information is described. Further, the method adjusts operating software parameters, either manually or automatically, while the system is operational without requiring an external device. The method includes 5 monitoring operating software scheduling information, analyzing operating software scheduling information and adjusting defined operating software parameters to modify system performance.